Code of Conduct

SEM Group 31b: Alexandra Darie, Xingyu Han, Robert Vadastreanu, Sander Vermeulen, Elena Dumitrescu and Zoya van Meel.

Project description:

Our task is to build an application about matching people for training and competitions for the rowing associations in Delft using microservices, following the Domain Driven Design concept.

Planning:

We will create a Backlog for our project based on the MoSCoW analysis. Afterward, based on the importance of the requirements, we will split the tasks into separate, weekly sprints. We aim for each member to work on a separate microservice.

We will create separate branches for the microservices, which will first be merged into the development branch after at least two merge approvals from members working on other services. Approximately once a week, we will merge the development branch into the main one.

Meetings:

Aside from the meeting with the TA, we will have another meeting during the lab. If needed, we will schedule more meetings per week.

For every meeting, we choose a chairman and a notetaker. At every meeting, the chairman and notetaker change such that, in the end, every team member will be at least once the chairman and the notetaker.

For the TA meetings, the chairman prepares and sends the agenda to the TA beforehand. This way, the meeting will take place in an organized manner and we will know exactly which issues we have to discuss. The notetaker will record the important content of the meetings and highlight the issues waiting to be solved in the coming week. The notetaker is also responsible for uploading all files required that week (apart from the agenda).

Disagreements:

We will try to reach a consensus when debating on certain disagreements. If that is not possible, we vote and the majority gets to make the final decision. In case of a tie, we will try to find a compromise that satisfies both sides and also ask the TA for assistance.

When unwanted behavior such as being late or unprofessional occurs, we discuss it among the team and, if that does not end the conflict, we will reach out to our TA. Furthermore, we will all be respectful and mindful of each other. Any issues that occur in this area will be handled the same way as any other disagreements.